

Lenten Meditation # 4
(Third Sunday in Lent)

Sharing Who We Are
"What Sharing Means"

D. T. Niles, the great minister, ecumenical leader and hymn writer of Sri Lanka and India, once wrote that "Christianity is one beggar telling another beggar where he found bread." Sharing who we are during the Lenten season – and in life as a whole – reflects this spirit. It is not that we are better than those around us or have more insight. It is the sharing of something we have learned or experienced, something that keeps us going. We tell others what feeds us, nourishes us and gives us strength. We share what we are and have, and also share with others in seeking more.

Giving and receiving – this is what human life is all about. The more we give the more we receive. The more we receive the more we have to give. As a number of people have said, "You cannot be human alone."

Often we see sharing only as giving. We tell children to share their toys and they may be reluctant, even though they are surrounded by more than they can possibly play with at one time. Sharing is seeing life as a two way street. As we grow older, we learn that our own giving may be matched by someone else, so that both have gained something new. We may even discover ways of sharing the same gift and seeing new possibilities.

Being truly open to others, even at the risk of being vulnerable, enables us to get to know them on a deeper level. Shared needs often find solutions we cannot find alone. Shared joys become greater. This two-way street of sharing reflects Jesus' readiness to share his experience of what God's love is all about. It recalls the disciples' willingness to give up their regular jobs and routines and become part of something greater.

Sharing is being fully alive, giving of ourselves and receiving from others. Whether we are wealthy or poor beggars, we have something to give and something to gain.
